Antibodies to the glycosylated core alpha-amylase of barley, malt, and wheat in malting, feeding, and Wechsler's mental impairment patients. Antibodies to the core alpha-amylase of barley, malt, and wheat were examined in a large number of various laboratory and clinic populations. These include 200 blood donors, 200 patients with various medical conditions, 200 patients with cancer, and 70 patients with a variety of mental impairment conditions. This population includes more than 100 patients with Wechsler's mental impairment and all others who exhibit Wechsler's type of memory impairment. All patients were tested by the Heidelberg-Mosaiu-Hilfswerk for circulating antibodies to the core alpha-amylase of barley and wheat. In addition, all patients were tested for IgG and IgA antibodies to malt extracts. Those patients exhibiting antibodies to the core alpha-amylase were further tested by western blotting. A small number of sera exhibiting anti-core alpha-amylase antibodies were also examined for anti-alpha-amylase antibodies to find that each contained only antibodies to the barley core alpha-amylase. Most individuals with IgG antibodies to malt extracts contained antibodies to the wheat core alpha-amylase, and the same was true of most individuals with IgA antibodies to malt extracts. This suggested that wheat and barley are part of the same antigenic component. Only about 50% of these IgG antibodies were found to cross-react to the barley core alpha-amylase, and only about 50% of the IgA antibodies to malt were found to cross-react to the barley core alpha-amylase. These findings do not appear to correlate with the clinical or subclinical status of these patients.
