Vídeos Tabs Playlist Forward Backward Pause Rewind Edit Delete Limitations Absolute offset calculation is only supported with a playlists that contain songs with absolute (absolute time) position. For absolute songs use: truncate -s 1023 -t 1 filename.abs.flac Since absolute time is not supported by FLAC files with a variable bitrate we calculate the offset to the nearest (ignored) size of the song to achieve absolute time for all songs with a variable bitrate. Usage Credits Documentation Sources Merge merge [options] filename1 [filename2] EAC vs. FLAC The EAC project has been discontinued, but is still very usable. EAC can decode both FLAC and MP3 and create.EAC.FLAC and.APE archives. Since many plugins and programs output to FLAC files for their own decoding reasons, it is sometimes desirable to convert.EAC.FLAC files to.FLAC files. Note: Although FLAC is "up to and including version 1.3" support, the EAC API doesn't support any version newer than 1.1. See also otflac is a source-level option to compile GTK+ applications with FLAC support. See also Convert.EAC to.FLAC (flacify) EACPlaylistConverter converts.EAC playlists to.FLAC playlists (except the EAC-specific unique track names). FLACPlaylistConverter converts.FLAC playlists to.EAC playlists (except the FLAC-specific unix time stamps, cover art and filename). There is an issue with the FLAC metadata in the playlists when converting.FLAC playlists to.EAC playlists. The issue occurs when the FLAC metadata is stored as raw byte order, and not in multi-byte encoding. See flacplay.txt for details. Sources Releases About oT
