Roblox is a game-based multiuser online sandbox game. At the beginning of the game, you are given one piece of your own game land to design the world in. You can then invite friends to play the game with you. In order to invite people to your game, you must have Robux, which is gained in game by completing game tasks or by spending real currency to spend as you wish. You can spend Robux to customize your Roblox experience and purchase in game content. You can also purchase top-up codes with real money to instantly generate Robux from coins. The game was inspired by Lego and Minecraft, with a game design ideology of creative collaborative development. The game is written entirely in Lua, which is a light, interpreted, garbage-collected programming language designed specifically for embedded systems. Lua is frequently used in video games, online games, and other media. Most of the games on Roblox are interactive and there are often multiplayer and social features. The game engine is publicly available. In 2011 it was ported to the Google Android platform in a form that developers could also use on desktops and laptops. In the same year, the same developer launched the BlackBerry App World store for a version of the platform specifically for BlackBerry phones. In 2016, a standalone version of the application was released called Creator for the iPad, containing all of the assets in the original desktop and laptop versions. The version contained additional features, including improved game scripting, new simple, livecollab visual chat, and AR photography. In late 2017, a version of the desktop Roblox was released for macOS and Linux. Later that year, Roblox announced that their mobile application would be available across Apple's iOS and Google's Android mobile operating systems. In May 2018, Roblox unveiled a new version of their website, Roblox Studio. Roblox Studio is a software development kit that provides access to content within the game, allows players to code content in Lua, and make improvements to existing content. In mid-2018, Roblox partnered with the Australian bank Westpac to promote a new digital currency called the R-Coin. At the same time, Roblox released a new version of the Creator application to support the new currency and developers were able to earn R-Coins from page views. Roblox began offering the R-Coin as an in-game currency in September 2018, with instructions on how to spend it. In
